Andrew Lloyd Webber Foundation heralds £2.8million investment for Music in Secondary Schools Trust

Andrew Lloyd Webber says “Never has a musical education been more important. The Arts, and music in particular, are proven to empower young people with the life skills needed for a successful future. I’m delighted my Foundation’s grant means nearly four thousand children will receive free instruments and music tuition. I only wish government would join in to make it four million.”

Today, Tuesday 5 July, the Andrew Lloyd Webber Foundation announces a new grant of £1.4million to be awarded to the Music in Secondary Schools Trust Andrew Lloyd Webber Programme. To be paid over four years, this grant secures the future of the programme in 8 London Schools and offers far reaching music opportunities to London school pupils.

The programme which began in 2013 in one school will this September be providing free classical music instruments and tuition to 3,700 young people across eight London state schools. Their mission continues to be to promote the music education of young people, targeting those who may not otherwise have the opportunity to engage with classical music.

The work of MiSST addresses the reduced resources and increased pressure on arts projects across schools in London. The music education programme has been found by participating schools to promote social behaviour, integration across school grades and ethnicities, and an appreciation and love for music amongst students.

Success stories from MiSST include 18 year old Deronne White, who first picked up an instrument at Highbury Grove School, has now secured a place on the National Youth Orchestra and will begin his studies in September at the Royal College of Music.

Deronne and 450 MiSST students also had the opportunity to perform alongside Nicola Benedetti at The Barbican in 2015 and to perform Photograph as part of National Youth Orchestra residency to its composer, Snow Patrol's Johnny McDaid.

In a celebration of the achievements of the Music in Secondary Schools Trust since it was launched in 2013 and looking towards its future, the trust has partnered with photographer Leonora Saunders to create a series of striking portraits, Challenge & Change. The portraits capture twelve young musicians from the Music in Secondary Schools Trust Andrew Lloyd Webber programme and look to challenge preconceptions surrounding classical music.

This funding has also enabled MiSST to commission a 10-year research project from the Institute of Education and University College London to assess the impact of the programme on students' overall educational achievements and life skills. The research hopes to demonstrate the empowerment of music to other funders and government.

Truda White, CEO of MiSST said:

"This is fantastic news for the young people who are on the Andrew Lloyd Webber Programme in MiSST partner schools. Arts and music provision are being seriously eroded and the take up of these subjects at GCSE is falling year on year. MiSST schools are reversing this trend and ensuring young people have a strong arts and music foundation as part of their curriculum. The outcomes from our research programme are extremely positive. The support MiSST receives from the Andrew Lloyd Webber Foundation, Charles Wolfson Charitable Trust and the Dame Alice Owen Foundation is invaluable."
